

How we help

For a person with epilepsy medication can be complicated. It's absolutely essential that medication is reviewed regularly to assess its efficacy.

It's not just about the type of medication, although that is a large consideration of our medication review service. Medication reviews can encompass a wide range of factors, including:

- Potential alternatives
- Side effects of current medication
- Dosages
- Frequency

The medication review is also about making things more convenient for the service user. It's also important that we assess service users and ensure they're finding their medication easy to manage. We also take into consideration any concerns the service user might have about their current treatment of medication and seek to suggest an alternative that might alleviate those concerns if appropriate.
