

Assessment Visits

How we help

Assessment visits are a series of initial evaluations that look at the entire picture for a person with epilepsy. This assessment will help us to gain a deep understanding of the person's unique situation and ensure we are best placed to make recommendations.

An assessment visit takes into account a wide variety of considerations, including:

- The service user
- The family and how it affects them
- History of the service user's epilepsy
- Frequency of seizures
- Triggers
- Environmental factors

An assessment visit is an important stage that will inform future environmental and medication recommendations and help us to write an effective care plan that works for the client and those involved in their care.

As is the case with most things, it's hard to provide the best advice without having all the facts first. Our experts conduct thorough and reliable assessments without being invasive that drills down to the heart of a situation and takes into account the unique aspects a service user might be facing.
